COPYRIGHT AND RESTRICTIONS

The copyright law of the United States (Title 17, United States Code) governs the making of photocopies or other reproductions of copyrighted materials. The various state privacy acts govern the use of materials that document private individuals, groups, and corporations.

Under certain conditions specified in the law, libraries and archives are authorized to furnish a reproduction if the document does not infringe the privacy rights of an individual, group, or corporation. These specified conditions of authorized use include:

- non-commercial and non-profit study, scholarship, or research, or teaching
- criticism, commentary, or news reporting
- as a NPS preservation or security copy
- as a research copy for deposit in another institution

If a user later uses a copy or reproduction for purposes in excess of "fair use," the user may be personally liable for copyright, privacy, or publicity infringement. This institution's permission to obtain a photographic, xerographic, digital, or other copy of a document doesn't indicate permission to publish, exhibit, perform, reproduce, sell, distribute, or prepare derivative works from this document without first obtaining permission from the copyright holder and from any private individual, group, or corporation shown or otherwise recorded.

Permission to publish, exhibit, perform, reproduce, prepare derivative works from, sell, or otherwise distribute the item must be obtained by the user separately in writing from the holder of the original copyright (or if the creator is dead from his/her heirs) as well as from any individual(s), groups, or corporations whose name, image, recorded words, or private information (e.g., employment information) may be reproduced in the source material. The holder of the original copyright isn't necessarily the National Park Service. The National Park Service is not legally liable for copyright, privacy, or publicity infringement when materials are wrongfully used after being provided to researchers for "fair use."

This institution reserves the right to refuse to accept a copying order if fulfillment of the order is judged in violation of copyright or federal or state privacy or publicity law.

HISTORY

Interpretation, Education, and Volunteers (IEV) at Haleakalā National Park are responsible for telling the story of the place now known as Haleakalā National Park to the public. IEV develops interpretation based primarily on three themes which are derived from the resources of the park - 1. The geologic processes from which evolved the outstanding volcanic and erosional features of Haleakalā, 2. The unique and indigenous ecological systems which contain rare and native plants and birds and how these ecosystems developed within the microclimate, and 3. How Hawaiians used the park landscape and how they related to the geological and biological process which created it. IEV uses these themes to connect visitors to the resources in the hopes that they will take what they learned back to where they're from and connect them to the National Park Service as a whole. They work to find tangible, intangible, and universal themes that visitors can relate to in order to help them better understand the language of the resources. This work includes outreach initiatives, stewardship of the resources, compliant and appropriate signage throughout the park, relationship building within the community, field trips and classroom visits, public affairs and social media, and the management of youth programs and volunteers-in-parks (VIP).
