“The time has come to inquire seriously what will happen when our forests are gone, when the coal, the iron, the oil and the gas are exhausted, when the soils...have been washed into the streams polluting our rivers....”

How the Island was Named

The island was first used as a seasonal hunting and fishing site by the Neocostin American Indians and called 'Analostan'. The island has had many other names through the years including "My Lord's Island" in 1632, "Barbados" in 1680, "Mason's Island" in 1717 and, finally its modern title of "Theodore Roosevelt Island" in 1933.

The Mason Family: 1717-1833

John Mason, son of George Mason IV, the Revolutionary Patriot, turned the island into a functional plantation and rural estate with a mansion. The island was completely replanted with crops and rose gardens. There was a ferry house on the island as well, so that individuals could cross the Potomac with livestock and other goods.

The Civil War

During the Civil War (1861-1864), the island served as a training area for the Union Army, including the First U.S. Colored Troops, an African American regiment composed of free blacks, escaped slaves and white officers. The Union Army operated a ferry and pontoon bridge from the north end of the island to Georgetown. From May 1864- June 1865, a freedmen's refugee camp occupied much of the island, including the Mason mansion.

Little Known Facts:

1. During the War of 1812, when the White House burned, the Mason Ferry was used to evacuate people from Georgetown to Virginia. President Madison used Mason's Ferry to escape from the invading British.
2. Among the famous people to come to Theodore Roosevelt Island were the escaped slave Sojourner Truth and the poet Walt Whitman. Both visited the island during the Civil War.
3. In 1890, a new world record for the 100-yard dash was set on the island with a time of 9 and $\frac{4}{5}$ seconds. The crouching start to races was also first used on the island.
4. In 1898, the island became an explosives test range for dynamite during the Spanish American war.

Theodore Roosevelt

The Early Years

Born on October 27th, 1858 in New York City, Theodore Roosevelt overcame the health challenges of asthma and poor eyesight and focused his attention on the outdoor world. He enjoyed collecting live animals and hunting “specimens” to study. As a youngster, he established his own natural history museum with items gathered from his neighborhood and family travels. By the time of his presidency, he was a well-known naturalist and outdoorsman. This background prepared him for many of the challenges of his administration.

Bird Search

There are many native birds on the island. In honor of Theodore Roosevelt’s love of wildlife, try to find the bird names within this word search.

- Bald Eagle
- Blue Heron
- Turkey Vulture
- Osprey
- Ring-billed Gull
- Woodpecker
- Blue Jay
- Carolina Chickadee
- American Robin

The “Teddy Bear”

One of the United States’ favorite toys is named for Theodore Roosevelt. The ‘Teddy’ Bear was named for Roosevelt after one of his many hunting trips. On the excursion, one of his helpers had caught and tied up a bear for him to shoot. Teddy, feeling that it was unsportsmanlike, refused to shoot the defenseless animal. This incident was popularized in newspapers and the idea of the “Teddy Bear” was born.

Making Connections

Theodore Roosevelt conserved millions of acres of public lands. Match the name of the park to the area he preserved.

1. Petrified Forest, Arizona

2. Devils Tower, Wyoming

3. Grand Canyon, Arizona

4. Yosemite, California

5. Montezuma Castle, Arizona

Roosevelt's Presidency

Theodore Roosevelt came into the presidency after William McKinley died. He was re-elected at the end of his term and held the title of 26th president. Under Roosevelt's leadership the federal government expanded its role in conserving our nation's resources and changed the public's perception that America's natural resources were inexhaustible.

One of his most lasting legacies was his significant role in the creation of 150 National Forests, 5 National Parks, 51 Federal Bird Preserves and 18 National Monuments. In total, Roosevelt was instrumental in the conservation of approximately 230 million acres among various parks and other federal projects.

Think Big

Can you imagine a tree so big that adults would look small next to it? These trees still exist today because of Theodore Roosevelt's actions against logging companies. Thanks to his work, many natural wonders have been preserved. Here is Theodore Roosevelt with the naturalist John Muir in Yosemite in 1903.
